

Alex Goldberg

As an Associate Attorney at Nochumson P.C., Alex's legal practice focuses on land use and zoning and real estate in general, where developers and investors, real estate professionals, and even home owners all value his attention to detail, creative problem solving, and keen ability to think on his feet.

Alex is passionate about providing unparalleled service to his clients, relying on his communication skills, empathy, and his approach of treating his clients like he would a family member.

During law school, Alex collected a wide variety of work experiences working with in-house counsel at a large hospital network, serving as a judicial intern at the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and working as a law clerk at law firms specializing in land use and zoning law.

While attending the Drexel University Thomas R. Kline School of Law, Alex served as a lead editor for its Law Review and was a member of its Moot Court Board.

Upon receiving his J.D. degree, Alex became an associate attorney at a mid-sized law firm in Center City, Philadelphia, where he was responsible for handling a variety of real estate matters, including land use and zoning.

He is admitted to practice in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

In addition to his J.D. degree, Alex also holds a B.S. degree in Public Policy Administration from James Madison University.